When I travel, I sometimes get a feeling that the place is too crowded with tourists. I wish to have space to put down my towel or to take a photo without people in front of a famous church. I'd like to eat local food and not go to a fast food chain restaurant that I also have available at home. I want to get an authentic experience and not something touristy.

I want to encourage good use of tourism, so I decided to promote and support ecotourism. It's a term that means sustainable tourism. Sustainable tourism brings welfare to the locals and doesn't impact the nature. It is important that the uniqueness and authenticity of the places stay the same for the generations to come.

Sustainable tourism is becoming more and more important. They are searching for the locations where they will have contact with the locals and with untouched nature, but there are less and less places that have that. Overcrowded tourist spots aren't the only problem, but it is also a problem that tourists leave a lot of trash behind them. Hostelling International Slovenia wants to help develop sustainable tourism, so they have devoted a new section on their website to sustainable tourism where they will publish articles from our volunteers who will choose to write about sustainable tourism. The articles will be about tourism, that is far away from the mass tourism we all know. Our goal is to promote the mobility of the young and sustainable tourism, so more people would try it, which would result in a better future of our planet. We want to give as many information as we can to the young travellers to help them travel sustainably.
